G. A. R. LEADER PRAISES WHEELER

"Fighting Joe" Typified Reunion of Country.

LIVED UP TO HIS WORD

"Corporal" Tanner Says All Honor Is Due Confederate Dead.

ATLANTA, March 27.-Speaking to an audience composed largely of Confederate veterans, Corporal James Tanner commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., this afternoon paid eloquent tribute to the life and services of the late Gen. Joe Wheeler. The occasion was a mass meeting called for the purpose of inaugurating a movement to erect a mon-ment to Wheeler's memory.

"He was your Joe Wheeler in the old days, my Johnny Reb friends," said Corporal Tanner. "He was ours and the nation's at La Guaysimas, San Juan Hill, in the Philippines, and he is ours in the halls of memory for all time, Lay the foundation of your monument se curely, that it may withstand the assaults of time and the elements, and saults of time and the elements, and build it as high as you please. From no sod stripped grave of any of our boys who went to death under his blows shall a single skeleton finger point in accusation of his soldierly conduct and Reunion Typified in Wheeler.

Referring to the reunion of the North and South, so well typified in the career of General Wheeler, Corporal Tanner

The first victim of the later war, that splendid yours Southern representative, Bagley, was laid in his grave shrouded in the nation's uniform beside his father, who went shrouded in Confederate gray. The old flag has been re baptized since Appomattox in the blood of South and North, alike.

"In an afternoon two months ago as I was about to enter my office in Washington I was halted by a prominent Rev. Father Thomas C. Hariin, S. J., member of the bar who said to me: pastor of the church.

'How do you feel; where have you been?' Miss Miller is the daughter of Mr. "I answered I have been witnessing a cene impossible to witness in any other country than ours, and I am feeling a little prouder of my American citizenhip than I ever did before."

A Wonderful Object Lesson.

"'What was it?" he asked me; and I answered that I had been to General Wheeler's funeral. There I saw the most distinguished of our land, our highest officials, from the President of the United States all down the line, gather- Transferred to Home Office of Tran- Nothing Doing at Charlottesville and ed to do sincere honor to the memory of a man who spent four of the best years of his life in trying to destroy

"What an object lesson it was to the epresentatives of the monarchies and republics of the world at large there assembled; what a guarantee of the perpetuity of our nation and of its future internal peace! If the object and the result of this great gathering were to be simply to praise the memory of a man brave among the bravest, of one concededly a great soldier, the result would not be worth the effort.

Mortal mind can coin no eulogy of bravery that can excel that simple statement of fact. "Then the end came. Boys,' said he. 'the war is over. You have done your duty as soldiers. I expect now that you will go to your homes and be as good citizens as you have been good soldiers. Good-by.' That was all.

Lived Up to His Parole.

"He gave his parole and he lived up to it. Upon bitter memories of buried hopes he turned his back and set his face toward the stars.
"Time came when there were signs of trouble on the national norizon, and he made no secret of the fact that if it Both Badly Injured as Result of Alterdid come his services were at the com-mand of his country. When reminded mand of his country. When reminded that there then stood upon the statute books of the nation a law prohibiting any man who had borne a commission in the Confederate army from holding one in the army of the United States, his ready response was that he reckoned that there would be plenty of room in the ranks. He meant it, every word of it. What! The American people in a war, treading battle fields, and Joe Wheeler not in it! He proved his sincerity.

Wheeler Again at Front.

"The restriction referred to had been wiped from the statute book. Trouble came from another quarter and war came. Once again Wheeler is in the saddle, his country's uniform enfolds him, his country's battle flag, the flag of his youth, floats over him, and in his mature years he is as valorous in its defense, as ready to die for it as he was in his young manhood willing to die, if need be, in his effort to puil it down.

All Honor to Confederate Dead.

"On the question of monuments to the soldier dead of the dead Confederacy,"

Mr. Tanner said, "I long since made up and the saddle and should be a since the saddle and a since the soldier dead of the dead Confederacy," my mind, and I shall never change my views thereon. When I find a people, no matter where on earth they are, who enmatter where on earth they are, who encourage their sons to go out to battle and death for their cause and who there in either defeat or victory will allow their last resting places to become unknown of men and their very memories to die out, there is a people for whom the world must feel but scorn and contempt the measure of which I have no power of language to express.

The Dominant Thought.

"I thank God that this community of feeling exists, and I give you my word that in what I have said here today I give you a fair expression of the thought give you a fair expression of the thought dominant among the hundreds of thousands of Union veterans, at whose head officially I have the honor to stand during the present year; and when I think of this community of feeling among old combatants, then I am firm in the faith that if it be given to the spirits of those gone before to view mortal scenes, then Grant and Lee, Johnston and Sherman, Wheeler and Sheridan, gazing over the battlements of the city of eternal peace, cognizant of such scenes as this, mutually exclaim, "Thank God, all is well below!"
